Bathi

Western Style Pandanus Basket

Bathi are woven from the split leaves of the Screw Palm (Pandanus spiralis). The leaves are dried in the sun, then soaked and boiled with root and bark dyes collected from the bush. Coil weaving was introduced to Arnhem Land in the 1930's. It was adapted from techniques used by indigenous women throughout south east Australia.

"Bush String" Bag

Hand spun bush string is mainly made from Balgurr – the inner bark of the Kurrajong tree (Brachychiton paradoxum) or the Cocky Apple tree (Planchonia careya). The bark is stripped from a young tree and chewed or beaten whilst still fresh. It is then pounded with a stone to separate the fibres which are then spun and rolled on the thigh. The string is then knitted or knotted to create a bag.

Pandanus Bag

Commonly known as "Dilly Bags", mindirr are woven from the split leaves of the Screw Palm (Pandanus spiralis). They are made in various shapes and sizes and are worn hanging down the back with the string across the forehead. The leaves are dried in the sun, then soaked and boiled with root and bark dyes collected from the bush.
